
THE SCHOOL OF LAW

General Information

The School of Law (SL) is one of the leading schools of Azerbaijan. It was established in 1991, since the first day of the creation of Khazar University. One of the specific features of the School is a high degree of innovation in both teaching and research of the faculty members and academic activity of the students.

Today the School has a student body of more than two hundred. The faculty of the School is thoroughly established. The student body is intellectually distinguished and diverse in interests. English and Azerbaijani both are used as a medium of instruction. The fact that English is used as a language of instruction in the School helps both students and faculty in their study, research, and professional activity, opening them the new horizons of contacts with the professional community worldwide.

The first Legal Clinic in the Caucasus was founded in 1998 at Khazar University School of Law. It trains young lawyers who have not only theoretical knowledge but also practical skills necessary for their legal practice and carries on social function in rendering a free legal assistance to the disadvantaged groups of the population of the country. The clinic offers an opportunity for students to handle all aspects of client matters, from initial interview through trial, hearing and other procedures.

There is also Moot Court functioning at the School. It was established with support of the American Bar Association Central European and

Rationale and Objectives

Recent changes in the social and political situation in the region, the country's regaining independence, and the new problems arising in the sphere of Law and Legal Regulations are the main features defining the core idea of the School's development. Clear understanding of the current conditions reinforces the necessity for developing new approaches to Legal Studies in the country. The modern international environment demands highly advanced professional knowledge combined with necessary tools to interact with the world community.

Each year, visiting professors, as well as practicing lawyers from law firms, government, and public organizations, contribute their specialized skills and knowledge to the students of the School.

The basic objectives of the School's educational policy are to provide its graduates with:

- advanced general and professional knowledge
- strong analytical and intellectual abilities
- high moral standards and value system
- understanding and applying legal concepts
- research skills and methods
- information processing skills
- problem-solving skills

The curriculum of the School helps its graduates to become skill-armed and highly experienced in their professional sphere.

Programs and Degrees

School of Law realizes that students often have different goals and different requirements in their quest for a legal education. With this in mind, the School of Law offers several programs designed to fit individual needs of students who seek a legal education. The School offers a number of academic programs in Law and International Law.

Undergraduate Programs

The degree programs in the School of Law are designed to expose students to a variety of intellectual challenges by combining a wide distribution of courses and the opportunity to specialize in one particular field.

The student is expected to select a major at the beginning of his/her freshman year. Every student has the right to change his/her major with the approval of the Dean's Office. Doing so, this student must meet the requirements of the new major.

The requirements for all the majors in undergraduate programs include:

- University Requirements
- General Education Requirements
- Major and Major-related Requirements

The University Requirements include two main components and give the total number of 27 credits:

English Language includes 15 semester credits of:

Ph.D. Programs

The Ph.D. programs in Legal Studies and International Law are highly specialized ones. The aim of these programs is to develop the candidate's skills in a specific field of Law and to increase his/her capacity to make research that will contribute to the existing theory and knowledge. For general information, please see "Theses and Dissertations. General Guidelines for Graduate Studies".

All requirements for the Ph.D. must be met approximately in three to four years.

During the first year, student must choose an advisor according to his/her and faculty research interests. The Ph.D. student's outline is prepared according to his/her educational background and characteristic features of the dissertation and must be approved by the Dissertation Committee consisting of Ph.D. Candidate's adviser and four other experts. Two of the latter must be external experts.

Ph.D. candidates are required to present a dissertation of approximately 120 -150 pages, consisting of research, analysis and collaborating data. The Ph.D. dissertation is usually worth 10-12 credits but in some exceptional cases the number of credits for a Ph.D. dissertation may be increased.

The candidate with a Master Degree admitted to the Ph.D. program is required to take at least 7 additional courses (32 to 60 credits) including a dissertation, although more credits and courses may be required to satisfy the particular aims of the student and the student's advisor. A student must complete the Major Requirements with a G.P.A. of 80 or above. Some Ph.D. majors allow a student to earn no more than 6 credits by teaching appropriate courses.

Students defend their dissertation at a final oral examination that is open to the public.

School of Law offers internship for Ph.D. candidates in various organizations, such as, state institutions responsible for legal regulation, law-enforcement organizations, legal consulting companies, etc.

Internship provides students with experience in professional environment, acquiring practical skills and experience, giving them the opportunity to adapt their academic knowledge to professional life, and to increase their chances of getting a better job upon graduation. In addition, the internee must fulfill specific academic requirements, written and oral, directly related to the work experience. Internship is worth 6 credits. Students are assessed and credits awarded on the basis of:

- Researching and writing a paper on their internship in the form of a substantial paper;
- At the end of the internship, the internee will present an oral report and discussion of the paper to the Dissertation Committee.

Every doctoral student must show competence in a foreign language and have necessary computer skills.

The application file should include:

- Admission application form
- Official transcripts from all institutions attended
- Statement of intent
- Letters of recommendation
